

Century Foods International

What should you look for in a contract food manufacturer?

The demand for new products is increasing as everyday life becomes more challenging and consumers realize—and are willing to pay for—convenient quality products. Partnering with the right manufacturer can help you meet this demand and increase your bottom line. Here are several categories to consider during your vendor selection process:

Research and development—An expert research and development team can help you develop the best-tasting, most functional products. This requires a team with backgrounds in chemistry, microbiology, nutrition, food science and chemical engineering.

Agglomeration and blending—A manufacturer should offer you comprehensive abilities such as: large scale blending, particle sizing, instantizing, agglomerating, and fluid bed drying of nearly any type of food ingredient.

Quality assurance—Quality is reflected in both your product and the pricing of your product. Your manufacturer should have a quality assurance/quality control lab to ensure that all ingredients and the final products are safe and meet all specifications. Continuous quality control means that random samples of all products are taken and analyzed before shipping so that your products are guaranteed to meet the highest food quality standards.

Filling and packaging—Look for a manufacturer that has the capacity and flexibility to meet your specifications, accommodating packaging of nearly any size or type and packaging details such as pressure-sensitive adhesive labels and shrink labels. The ability to address your security needs with tamper evident seals, neckbands and induction seals is a must.

Century Foods

Our expertise. Your success.

It comes down to choosing a manufacturer that has the resources and experience to help you achieve your product production and sales goals. Century Foods has the leading reputation for doing just that. Century Foods is a single source for engineering and manufacturing for both branded and private label products. Whether you want to manufacture an existing product, improve a product, or even develop a new product—Century Foods offers the resources and experience that will facilitate your success. Our unique development and processing capabilities offer limitless options for products designed to meet the specialized needs of professional athletes and those for general health and wellness.

Century Foods works confidentially with customers around the world to produce a diverse collection of nutritional products from simple protein beverages to more complex meal replacements and dietary supplements. From development, manufacturing and testing to packaging, Century Foods has the experience to provide a turn-key solution for your retail product launch.

Century Foods International

400 Century Court
PO Box 257
Sparta, WI 54656
1-800-269-1901
www.centuryfoods.com
info@centuryfoods.com

A Division of Hormel Foods Corporation.

