

Dairy FOODS

Hair-brained idea

Dairy Foods editor donates hair net collection to UW-Madison

Journalist has acquired several dozen hair nets, protective eyewear, ear plugs and booties from visits to dairy processing facilities.

April 1, 2016

---

Watching dairy processors put milk into bottles, stir cheese curds and freeze ice cream mix is all in a day's work for Dairy Foods editor-in-chief Jim Carper. In nearly six years on the job, he has acquired several dozen pieces of food-safety apparel from touring the processing plants of America's leading dairy processors.

Today he announced plans to give his personal collection of food safety apparel to the dairy science program at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. The collection consists of several dozen hair nets, mustache guards, protective eye glasses, ear plugs, lab coats, booties and visitor badges.

"I've been honored to have been granted access to some of America's top dairy processing facilities," Carper said. "In my own small, but very personal way, I want to give back to the dairy industry. Sending my collection of food safety apparel to Madison was the best thing I could think of. More importantly, it will make my wife happy that I'm getting all this stuff out of the house."

Officials from the university declined to accept his offer.

Copyright ©2016. All Rights Reserved BNP Media.

Design, CMS, Hosting & Web Development :: ePublishing